

Ionic Implantation

Antonino PICCIOTTO, FBK

The talk focused on the main characteristics of the ion implantation processes, with a description of the physics processes involved during the interaction of the accelerated ions with the host materials. A series of example describes the advantages and disadvantages of the use of the ion implantation in the standard microfabrication framework of silicon sensors and devices, with a particular attention to the modern application of that technique.