

Alessandro Brilloni is 2nd year PhD student at the Laboratory of Electrochemistry of Materials for Energetics (LEME). He is working on sustainable materials for high potential cathodes for Li-ion batteries. In particular his research focuses on the use of bio-derived polymers to be used as binder in water processable cathodes, lowering the environmental impact of production processes.