

Lorenza Ferrario received the Master Degree in Statistical Sciences from the University of Bologna, in 1988 and the PhD degree in Engineering Sciences from the University of Freiburg, Germany, in 2007. She works at the Fondazione Bruno Kessler, where she is head of the Microfabrication Area Facility, MNF, since 2010. Since May 2018, she is the Fondazione Bruno Kessler referent in the It-Fab, the Italian network of KET facilities. Her research interests include silicon technology, silicon based concentration photovoltaics, PVD and PECVD processes, information systems for cleanroom management optimization. Dr. Ferrario led several research projects and taught in master degree and PhD courses. She is coauthor of more than fifty scientific papers.